Dear Mr. Kerr,

On the occasions that we receive a letter from someone praising an attorney for their fine work and unmatched dedication to a client, we like to give pause and share this news, as it reminds us all about the impacts that we as lawyers can make in one person's life.

I was particularly intrigued by the enclosed letter from Mr. Michael Leon, as he was not a client. To have left such an imprint with just a few phone calls speaks to the intellectual generosity and professionalism that Mr. Leon praises in his letter.

On behalf of the Colorado Bar Association, I would like to personally commend you for your dedication to the profession and to serving those in need of assistance.

I hope you will continue to bring this consideration and attention to each and every case you handle.

Sincerely,

Dear Attorney Chan,

I wanted to write you as I had an extraordinarily positive experience with a Colorado attorney.

I had contacted attorney David S. Kerr with Santangelo Law Offices, P.C. in Fort Collins, this last March.

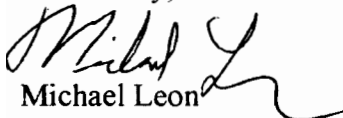

My case ended with me as a prevailing party in a federal copyright suit, Righthaven LLC v. Leon, et al on April 20. The reason I write is not because Mr. Kerr was my attorney; he was not.

Rather, I had spoken with attorney Kerr by phone several times and I encountered an intellectual generosity and manner of good will so extraordinary that I am compelled to honor this veritable public resource.

Subsequently, I have learned—not surprisingly—that attorney Kerr has worked diligently in pursuit of justice for his clients in copyright cases regarding Righthaven LLC, contributing importantly to copyright case law in this jurisdiction.

It's my belief that attorney Kerr does honor to your profession and to your state, sir, and the best practices and traditions of the law embodied in Kerr's dedication and social conscience ought to be noted with the Colorado Bar.

Yours truly,

Michael Leon
